

SCRIPT: The legend of the 3 sisters

I am going to tell you the story of the three sisters located in the Sydney's Blue Mountains. Here's the story.

Once upon a time, there were three sisters named "Meehni", "Wimlah" and "Gunnedoo" who lived in the Katoomba tribe near Sydney. These three sisters were young and beautiful, all their tribe loved and admired them. The 3 ladies fell in love with three brothers who were strong and courageous, they came from the Nepean tribe. But tribal law forbade them to marry. Their love was impossible.

The three brothers were not happy to accept this law, so they decided to use force to capture the three sisters. This caused a major tribal battle, a big war between the Katoomba and Nepean tribe.

As the lives of the three sisters were seriously in danger, a witchdoctor from the Katoomba tribe had an idea. He decided to turn the three ladies into stone to protect them and wanted to reverse the spell when the battle was over.

Unfortunately, the witchdoctor himself was killed in the fight and as only he could reverse the spell, the three sisters remained as magnificent rock formations.

Today, you can still see "Meehni", "Wimlah" and "Gunnedoo" at Katoomba in the Blue Mountains, west from Sydney. They are a reminder of this battle for the generations to come.
